ACCESS TO INFORMATION IN LOCAL GOVERNMENT

1 SUMMARY

- 1.1 The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (ODPM) has produced a policy paper on the current and future framework governing access to information for local authorities in England. A copy of the Executive summary of the paper is annexed at Appendix 1.
- 1.2 Councils are invited to comment on the paper and a consultation in the form of 25 questions, annexed at Appendix 2, is included within the document.

2 INTRODUCTION

2.1 Current Legislation

- 2.2 The Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 introduced the general principle that reasonable public notice must be given of all matters to be considered at any council, committee or sub-committee meeting. Adequate facilities must be provided for members of the public to see copies of reports and materials on which reports are based.
- 2.3 The Act also introduced the concept of "confidential" and "exempt" information. For matters that are confidential, that is material supplied in confidence by government departments or where disclosure is prohibited by statute or by a court, exclusion of the public is automatic.
- 2.4 In the case of exempt information, the meeting has a choice whether to exclude the public or not. Exempt information is defined by Schedule 12A of the Local Government Act 1972 and is reproduced for information at Appendix 3 to this report.

2.5 Freedom of Information Act 2000

2.6 The Freedom of Information Act 2000 (the Act) is much more far reaching. It provides that any person making a request for information to a public authority is entitled (a) to be informed in writing by that authority whether it has the information requested and (b) if it does, to have that information communicated to him/her.

- 2.7 The Act is phased and will come into effect in full in January 2005. As well as the general right of access to information, it includes;
 - A new information Tribunal with powers to enforce those rights
 - A new post of Office of Information Commissioner combining responsibilities for data protection and freedom of information
 - A duty to disclose exempt information where it is in the public interest to do so
 - Publication Schemes each authority must adopt a scheme for the publication of information
- 2.8 The Act itself includes exemptions, some of which are "absolute". Exemptions generally relate to matters that it is not in the public interest to divulge and are largely concerned with central government functions.
- 2.9 Freedom of Information is simple in concept but complicated in effect and further reports and Member/Officer training will be provided between now and 2005 and as guidance is issued.

3 THE ODPM POLICY PAPER - CONSULTATION

- 3.1 The policy document now issued is part of a review process looking at the current access to information regime and ahead to the new requirements under the Freedom of Information Act but is principally concerned with the operation of executive rather than alternative arrangements. In particular, the ODPM is seeking views on:
 - How councils can most effectively provide local people with information both now and when the Freedom of Information Act 2000 comes into force, and how the new requirements will work alongside existing responsibilities
 - How it effects executive arrangements
 - How authorities operating executive arrangements define "key" decisions.
- 3.2 As a result it is difficult for this authority to comment directly on the 25 specific questions raised in the paper. Therefore, rather than respond to the questionnaire, it is suggested that the Council offer a general comment on those issues outlined in the Executive Summary.

4 COMMENTARY

4.1 Current Duties and Responsibilities

- 4.2 This authority has endeavoured to operate in an open and transparent way for many years and welcomes the Act as a further move to open government. However, local authorities are already subject to powerful access rights. As well as the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 and the Local Government Act 2000, the Accounts and Audit Regulations 1983 require that all "books, deeds, contracts, bills, vouchers and receipts" pertinent to the audit must be available to the public for 15 days.
- 4.3 In practical terms, the cost in time of making information available is a problem. Members of the public can have difficulty identifying the documents relevant to their enquiries. Some may undertake "fishing expeditions" with no clear purpose other than curiosity. Even when identified and available, deeds and documents cannot be left unattended during inspection. The nature of an enquiry may mean that a person will spend several hours perusing documents.
- 4.4 The Council must carry out its statutory duties. Of necessity, it will set priorities. The Council is required to produce a range of plans and strategies from Best Value Performance to Home Energy Conservation. A Publication Scheme is required under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 by 31 December 2002. There are no additional resources for this task but, as usual, officers will use their best endeavours to see that it is completed within the timeframe set by government.
- 4.5 Open government is important, and given the accountability of Members to the electorate and the freedom to information under the 2000 Act, it is perhaps appropriate for the government to relax the current resource intensive regime of regulation and inspection or to make adequate funds available to undertake such initiatives.

4.6 The Process of Records Management

- 4.7 Any freedom of information legislation is only as good as the quality of the records to which it provides access. Councils across the country are striving to achieve the government target of 2005 for electronically enabled transactions. The Public Record Office has produced model action plans for developing records management systems. This should be co-ordinated nationally utilising a document imaging process to allow search and retrieval facilities obviating the need for personal contact in most cases. Access to information could thus become widely available uniformly, quickly, efficiently and securely and within the spirit of the Act.
- 4.8 Government departments hold vast amounts of information and are included within the scope of the Act. A national programme of procurement of document imaging technology and implementation for all public bodies, funded centrally, would be considerably more cost effective as a means of achieving the step change envisaged under the Act than leaving individual authorities to devise individual solutions.

5 RESOURCE IMPLICATIONS

5.1 None at present other than officer time in developing a Publication Scheme, estimated at one week. Implementation of the Act in full is likely to impact on officer time with additional costs flowing from changes in the authority's records management which have not yet been quantified.

6 LEGAL IMPLICATIONS

6.1 The Act introduces new duties and obligations on the Council to be detailed in further reports.

7 RECOMMENDATION

7.1 It is proposed that Committee considers its response to the Policy Paper and recommends accordingly. (CD(LPA))

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The context of this policy paper

- Our councils should be open in the way they do business. In delivering local services to local people and in how they make decisions. They need to be ready to provide information about the council's services and the decisions they make.
- 2. Councils already make a great deal of information available to the public both through the roles they work noder and on their own initiative. Under existing roles, the public already have access to the minutes and reports from council meetings and the reasons why councils have made decisions, as well as a wealth of information in areas of key service provision, such as housing, education, health and planning.
- 3. Alongside the existing rules for access to information, people will have new rights to obtain information under the Freedom of Information Act 2000. This Act will bring about a step change in the runge of information the public can request from their cosmell and the way in which the council releases it to them.
- 4. The first milestone is that councils must produce, by February 2003, a guide for the public to the information they publish or intend to publish. This is known as a Publication Scheme. It will show everyone what information they can get, where they can get that information, and if there is a charge for information. The full set of rules will come into force from January 2005.
- 5. Under Freedom of Information, the essential approach is that any person will have a general right to see any information that is held by the council. Local authorities can decide to withhold certain types of information, for example iffit relates to information. Provided in confidence or personal information about a third party. But, in most of these cases, the council will not be able automatically to withhold information If they want to do so, they have to be able to prove that it is the public interest to do so. They will need to be able to justify such a decision to the independent information Commissioner.

Issues for consideration

чh

- 6. Because new rules are coming in the Government is reviewing the purcers access to information rules which apply to local authorities to see how they can best be integrated with the new rules under Precion of Information. This consultation document is an important part of the review process, and is intended to help deliver a culture of openness throughout local government.
- ?. We use asking individuals, user-groups and key stakeholders to tell us;
 - how they think councils can most effectively provide local people with information, both now and when the Freedom of Information Act 2000 comes into force,
 - * what principal with the people who want access to information held by local authorities face, and how these can be addressed,

Access to Information in Local Government

- how the new regultements will work alongside the responsibilities councils already have to release information, and whether the existing tules need amending to make them clearer and easier to openue, for both councils and for local people.
- how councils release information to the public now including examples of best practice and examples of how they use electronic media, such as the intermet.
- 3. More detailed questions to which we are seeking answers can be found at Annex C. We also welcome any general comments about the basies rilsed in this paper and comments from user groups about their practical expensions of the implications of the legislation. We would be grateful for comments by 2 December 2002.
